Southern oratory had its inning at the Protestant Episcopal Convention yesterday aternoon. All the elements for such fray as is loved of men whose traditions centre about the rostrum were there. They had a good subject. There was plenty of feeling on both sides, feeling bred of a situation that developed into civil war, and then went right on being ! a situation that the war did not solve, a feeling tempered by the training and the spirit of churchmen. Opportunity there was to say many things and they were One man with a soft Southern dialect told how he just loved those negroes. Another man said he could see himself getting out of the church if he had to talk to a colored bishop. Still another told how far South he was born and how to a colored bishop. Still another told how far South he was born and how much he knew about the negroes, because he lives in Alabama where they have eight negroes and a half to every white nian.

Others said their brothers had not been successful with the negro because they had not tried to be. They talked about the great war, about reconstruction days and about everything else that pertained to the question, whether the negro should have a church jurisdiction all his war. In the end a compromise prevailed one faction wanted no racial missionary districts in the church. The other faction proclaimed them as the only solution of a problem which they said threatens to destroy the church. Finally it was decided to find out more about the subject. For that purpose they decided upon a sombision that will ussle with it for the next three years and bring it ammunition for the debaters to go all over it again at the next convention.

Compared With Filipinos.

The Rev. George Sherwood Whitney of Georgia opposed the creation of racial districts and said that it was just as sensible to say that the Filipinos ought to have self-government so that they could develop themselves. Then he came right out with an argument that had up to that time been kept under cover.

"What would be my position," he said.

His rea-son for declining is that because of the creation of church provinces by this con-vention and other changes in church govvention and other changes in church government and missionary work it would be disadvantageous to break in another man as secretary of the Board of Missions.

The House of Bishops has passed the pension scheme for the clergy agreed to on Saturchay by the House of Deputies. Because of the press of business the Bishops are to meet at 9:30 o'clock this morning instead of at 10 o'clock.
